Couples in Buchanan often look south toward Roanoke when they start wedding planning, but some of the best options are much closer to home. Bailey Wick Farm Wedding & Event Venue is in Fincastle, the historic county seat of Botetourt County, which means Buchanan families can celebrate on a working farm without leaving the county.

Buchanan sits along the James River, and many people there already have a deep connection to the rural landscape of Botetourt. Bailey Wick Farm leans into that setting with a rustic barn, a pavilion, open fields and wide views of the Blue Ridge Mountains. It is the kind of place where a wedding feels rooted in the region rather than dropped into a generic event hall.

The barn itself is spacious and comfortable. The venue notes 6,480 square feet of space, heating and air conditioning, a kitchen area and restrooms equipped with televisions and Wi-Fi. A gas log fireplace and an antler chandelier give the interior its character, and the two dressing rooms keep the bride's side and groom's side organized before the ceremony.

Keeping It Local

There is something special about a wedding where most of the guests know the roads, the views and each other. For Buchanan families, choosing a Botetourt County venue keeps travel short and lets you work with nearby vendors who know the area well. It also means that years from now, you can drive past the farm on the way to Fincastle and point out exactly where you said your vows. That sense of place is hard to get from a venue in a city an hour away, and it is one of the reasons couples choose to stay close to home.
