

Hiring a Midland Car Accident Lawyer Versus Handling the Claim Yourself Not every crash needs a lawyer. If someone backs into your bumper in a parking lot near Midland Park Mall, nobody is hurt, and the other driver's insurer admits fault and pays for the repair, you can probably handle that yourself. Get the other driver's information, take photos, file the claim and keep your receipts. Texas is an at-fault state, so the at-fault driver's liability coverage is supposed to pay for your damage. For a simple property damage claim, that often works just fine. Things change the moment someone is hurt. Injury claims involve medical bills, future treatment, lost wages and harder-to-measure losses like pain and suffering, mental anguish and physical impairment. Adjusters handle these claims every day, and their job is to pay as little as the facts allow. One common move is to argue you were partly to blame. Under Texas proportionate responsibility rules, your damages go down by your share of fault, and if you're found more than 50 percent at fault, you get nothing. A few well-placed questions in a recorded statement can shift that percentage, and most people have no idea it's happening. Coverage limits are another trap. The Texas minimum is 30/60/25, meaning $30,000 per injured person, $60,000 per crash and $25,000 for property damage. A serious wreck on Interstate 20 or Loop 250 can blow past those numbers quickly. Then the question becomes whether your own personal injury protection or uninsured and underinsured motorist coverage applies. Both must be offered in Texas and are included unless you rejected them in writing. Sorting that out on your own while you're recovering is a lot to ask.
