Letting a house in Cathays means your roof works to a timetable. Tenants move out, new ones arrive, and the few weeks in between are the best chance you'll get to sort out anything that needs scaffolding, noise or access to bedrooms. Redland Roofing Cardiff, a family-owned roofing contractor based on Trecinon Road in Rumney, understands that pressure. Owner John Owen has over 30 years in the roofing trade, and a good share of the work comes from landlords with student lets and HMOs in Cathays and Roath, a short drive in along Newport Road. The housing stock around Cardiff University and the streets off City Road and Crwys Road is mostly Victorian terraces with Welsh slate roofs, party-wall chimneys, rear outriggers and small flat roofs over kitchens and bathrooms. Those roofs work hard. A house full of students produces plenty of steam from showers and cooking, and a flat roof or valley gutter that's slightly past its best can turn a small leak into damp, mould and an unhappy phone call. The usual jobs are slipped slates, cracked ridge mortar, worn lead joints, blocked valley gutters, tired felt over outriggers and crumbling chimney stacks. Redland Roofing Cardiff handles all of these, along with flat roof replacement using an EPDM rubber membrane over new tongue-and-groove sterling board decking, chimney removal, and new gutters, fascias and soffits. Plenty of Cathays landlords don't live anywhere near Cardiff, and that's where clear communication matters most. One landlord based more than 250 miles away received photos throughout the job, so every decision could be made without travelling. Customers on Google often mention photos and videos sent before and after the work, and John explaining exactly what he's found in plain language. For a remote owner, that means you see the problem with your own eyes, approve the fix, and see the finished result, all from home.
